The Bismarck Tribune.

Bismarck, D. T., May 5, 1875.

A REGULAR BONANZA.

Determined to increase the circulation of the Bismarck TRIBUNE by any means within our reach, with a view to disseminating correct information in relation to the Black Hills and the Northwest generally, we have accepted a very liberal offer from the Weed Sewing Machine Company, and have determined to offer one of their sixty-five dollar Sewing Machines for every club of thirty-five subscribers at two dollars each, sent at one time during the next year. In addition to this premium of a Sewing Machine to the getter up of a club of thirty-five, we will give to each subscriber a copy of our magnificent Chromo of Gen. Custer, 19 x 25, a faithful portrait of this brilliant and popular Cavalry Commander, which is alone worth the price of subscription.

The TRIBUNE is a well established journal, now in its second year, and is published seventy-five miles nearer the Black Hills and gives more information concerning them than any other newspaper. Persons having leisure will find soliciting for the TRIBUNE not only pleasant employment but profitable. Ladies will find this a favorable opportunity to secure a first class sewing machine without costing them a dollar. A copy of the Custer Chromo and specimen copies of the paper sent post paid to those desiring to get up a club, on receipt of fifty cents. Address TRIBUNE, Bismarck, D. T.

RESULT OF AN ASSAY.

We add to the testimony of General Ouster and the miners the testimony of the rocks which seems to be conclusive evidence that precious metals exist in the rocks of the Black Hills; that there is rich placer mining can not be doubted. Mr. W. L. Carpenter of the 9th Infantry, who accompanied the boundary survey as entomologist on behalf of the Smithsonian Institute, and who is not only a geologist of some reputation but has had much practical experience in western mines, examined the specimens of quartz brought in by the miners who accompanied Ouster's expedition, pronouncing them a fine prospect which, though on assay proved but a trace of gold in the surface quartz, would justify the expenditure of much money to find a proper specimen to submit to the assay. He took several specimens of the quartz for the Smithsonian Institute, and below we give the result of an assay of one of them. The report speaks for itself.

Camp Robinson, Neb., Feb. 14, 1875.

Editor Bismarck Tribune:
Dear Sir—The specimen of quartz which you procured for me while in Bismarck, last October, from Mr. McHenry and which came from the "Ouster" mine in the Black Hills, had, as you of the best assay in the country, in your assay, shown a trace of gold. Of course this could be regarded as a test of the ledge, as it came from the surface; but it was regarded as remarkably good by all judges who have seen it, and has been very profitable.

THE MONTANA BUSINESS.

Montana freights are now being received at this station, over the Northern Pacific, and forwarded to Carroll at the rate of 250 tons a week.

The good steamers Josephine and Key West have been assigned to the work of forwarding it, and from the present outlook they will take care of it as fast as it arrives.

The boats are new, light draft, fast and elegant, and specially adapted to the work assigned them; while from present indications the river will be favorable during the greater part of the season.

Everything is favorable this season, while last year everything was against this route. Then the route was new and untried, the water in the river was unusually low, and Commodore Kountz met with a series of accidents to his boats, which, while they were entirely unexcusable and unavoidable through human foresight, occasional loss, delay and doubt; but with a few good trips this spring, and as we will be well again, and we shall be greatly mistaken if the Montana business of this year over the Northern Pacific, now amounting to about a thousand tons a month, is not more than quadrupled next season. Indeed, it may be largely increased even this season, for this is but the beginning.

D'Unger, who has been trying to "bust" the Northern Pacific Company for some weeks, it seems, from his own statement, demanded a section of land in payment for the blowing he had done on his own motion, for the Northern Pacific during the past five years. Gen. Cass refused to recognize his claim, hence D'Unger's warfare. The Doctor has some good points, and in his struggle for existence at Duluth, has had our sympathy, but in this case, he has hurt himself, by proving that he acted the part of a fool or a knave in the past, or that of a mere blackmailer in his recent efforts.

Contracts.

The publishers of the TRIBUNE regret that lack of space will not permit them to give a full list of the bidders for supplying the Quartermaster's stores for this department. They give the facts of interest to this locality.

For Camp Hancock S. G. Bridges is lowest bidder, his bid being $41.16; W. W. Nicholls $4. N. P. Clark bid $3.35 on wood and B. W. Lewis $8.75; H. & R. Douglas bid $5.98 on hay, and N. P. Clark $7.90.

For Randall W. W. Nicholls bids $1.12 on corn and Bridges $1.26. Bridges on oats 73 and Nicholls 85; J. Gray wood $5.15, Clark $5.84, Nicholls hay $7.49.

For Seward John Isaacson bids $1.25 for corn, Nicholls $1.27; on oats Isaacson $1.25, Nicholls $1.27; wood, Peter Lewis $4.65, and A. Fuller, $5.87 for soft, M. K. Armstrong $8.41, and Wm. Huxley $9.00 for hard. For hay, N. Myrick $4.45.

For Bismarck, Isaacson $1.30, and Heyderstodt $1.31 for corn; Isaacson 89, V gel 93, and Faron 93 for oats.

For Buford, P. G. Deatbe, $1.38, Bridges $1.75; for corn, Vogel 93, Bridges, 1014 for oats; wood, Thomas Johnson, $4.44; L. J. Jackson $4.87; hay, James Robinson, $8.80.

For Rice W. B. Cairns, $1.26; and W. H. Dixon $1.30 for corn; for oats, C. S. Kuchon 85 and Bridges 85; for hay, J. C. Leach $7.10, and H. McCrear $7.45.

For Stevenson, Deatbe $1.38, Merriam $1.65 for corn, oats Vogel 93, Bridges 95; for wood, D. W. Stevenson $8.00; G. P. Upham $8.25; for coal, Jas. Martin $3.09, and W. Braithwaite $3.15; for hay, A. D. Hastings $6.95, B. F. Stanton $7.62.

For Fort Lincoln, corn, Cairns $1.26; Heyderstodt $1.31; oats J. A. Sugar 83, Bridges 84 1-16; hay, S. H. Little 500 tons $8.67, A. C. Jamison do, $8.75, C. Shattock $8.94, W. P. Littlepage $9.25, W. R. Hopkins $9.85. On this item there were 27 bidders, the bids running as high as $14.95 by Nichols. Clark bid $13.34, Roberts $12.85, and M. K. Armstrong $11.90. On hard wood Elkhardt bid $4.75, B. Clark $5.25, on soft wood Ed Tuman $3.39, and Harrington $3.47.

There were upwards of 400 bids opened, and the TRIBUNE only attempts to give the lowest and next lowest.

Since the TRIBUNE protested against interference in our local politics by E. D. Barker, then Deputy Collector, in the fall of 1873, and his misrepresentation in Yankton papers of some of our best citizens; and especially since the TRIBUNE's denial of the dog fight yarn, the editor of the TRIBUNE has lain heavy on the said Barker's stomach, and ever since he took charge of the Mirror, he has been making desperate efforts to show his readers how badly he is educated with Lounsberry on the "howls." This unbusiness on his part may relieve him and amuse Lounsberry.

A few days ago a hearse arrived from Rochester, New York, consigned to E. D. Barker, of this city. The hearse was transported from the shop in Rochester without charge of extra from the fact that it was originally placed. Before shipment the manufacturers placed a large box over it to protect it from the weather. The box rested on the axles, inside the wheels, being long enough to extend from the rear over the dashboard in front. Owing to the construction of the driver's seat on the hearse, the covers of the box extended far enough to allow room for the body of a man to pass between the box at that point and the hearse. The front end of the vehicle is so constructed as to swing open, and thereby hangs the tale. This was noticed by some one who silently contemplated how easy it would be to save a few cents and see the country where strawberries grow as large as hen's eggs all the year around, and then pounced off to lay in a stock of provisions. These he procured, and poked them through the cavity between the hearse and the box, after which he followed. Once within the wooded sepulchre, it was thought he waited a song of praise, for there reposed a large box partially filled with silver-plated cutlery, trimmings, etc., which had been packed in straw and shavings, as also the seat cushions. After arranging his corned beef, bread, sardines, hermetically-sealed cabbage, and a quantity of tobacco, he arranged the trimmings in the box so as to leave a nice place in the centre for him to repose in. And then, after taking a drink and a chew of tobacco, he reclined amid the straw and fine shavings, and quietly snickered. The appearance of this suffering soul as he laid back and ejaculated the nicotine from between his ruby lips against the plate glass side of that hearse must have been satisfactory. As was seen by the remnants left in his lodgings, his appetite remained substantial throughout the journey; but his amiable weakness seems to have been in lining the glass walls of his sanctum with tobacco juice. A highly-colored, short stemmed clay pipe, found in the corner, gave proof that it was not allowed to rust with inactivity; and told how vacation between meals was sometimes passed—Oakland (Cal.) THE ANAZONI CORPS.

A Romance of the Army.

BY LILDA W. HAUGHTON.

CHAPTER XXI.—ROSS'S WORKING.

Corporal Inglebright fully justified the expectation of his friends by exemplary conduct and unflinching bearing in his improved position. Realizing that the great events of life are modeled and conditioned after the small ones, he gave to even the most unimportant duty, his undivided attention and conscientious execution. He rose daily in favor in the Regiment and became a prime favorite with both officers and men, commending himself to the former by his respectful, yet self-respecting manner and trustful reliability, and finding favor with the latter, by his strict impartiality and painstaking consideration for their comfort.

Promotion came speedily. He was made Sergeant and filled successively the responsible offices of First duty Sergeant, and First Sergeant of the Company, discharging the duties of each with credit to himself, and to the satisfaction of his superiors. Finally, he was made Quartermaster Sergeant and became wise in the fertile expedients by which men called honorable sought to enrich themselves at the expense of a prodigal and too confiding government. His moral sense was at first shocked at the callousness of conscience and guilefulness of touch developed in chronic cases of official tenure by long handling of public funds. He was startled by the reckless indifference and bold assurance of many common schemes of self-aggrandizement, but as he did his conscience soon became from familiar practice with the ropes behind the scenes, that he was able to laugh heartily at a certain mild instance in which an amiable Inspector or General was made the unconscious dupe of a very sharpwitted official.

But a short time previous to the visit of the Inspector, the epidemic of poker playing had broken out with great virulence; a party of officers from a neighboring post had visited the Fort, and in a hotly contested match for the championship had carried off all the available funds of the Post, including the company fund of several doughty captains. Close upon the heels of this defeat came the announcement of the Inspector's visit. Then there was marshaling in hot haste. Each officer set his monetary house in order and prepared to meet the foe. There was polishing of rusty firearms, and scouring of dusty uniforms. The quarters of the command were duly swept and garnished, and each man arrayed in his best "bit and tucker," came forth to meet the hostile glance of the Inspector's eyes. He came, and though the heart of many a brave man quaked before the stern sharp gaze of those critical orbs as they slowly traveled up and down the shining gunstocks held aloft for his inspection, there was not a soldier blinched. Bath-brick and "elbow grease" had done their work, and the cold unfeeling eyes looked on in stern approval. But ill fared it for a time with their superiors; their ammunition had given out, in other words, the "Company fund" was not at hand, and many a stout heart quaked at the dread reminiscence. It was indeed a trying scene. The Knights of the Poker who were ever first at the card table and last to leave it, the gallant souls who had bravely battled for the championship, and borne defeat without a grin upon their manly faces, now stood pale and thoughtful.

But strategy prevailed where valor was helpless. Hastily mustering their pocket-books, they discovered that by a judicious consolidation of their contents, enough of the requisite treasury notes could be raised to cover the amount in each particular case. The amount was deposited in the safe of the first company to be inspected; was duly counted and declared correct by the Inspector. It was then adroitly slipped out and conveyed into the next safe, and so on to each company according to the rank of its captain in succession, until the same package of money had been laboriously counted six times by the Inspector.

The sharpwitted heroes smiled at the success of their plan and the Inspector is to this day ignorant of the deceit practiced upon him.

As the spring blossomed into summer, Mrs. General Ristenbatt, who had remained behind her husband, returned to the Fort accompanied by Judelle. Sergeant Inglebright was delighted beyond measure by the expectation of Judelle's arrival, but his spirits sank to a corresponding degree on finding the ladies escorted by a fair faced young officer in whom he at once recognized his old acquaintance Lieutenant Smith of the Recruiting Service. Ross stood at the landing when the party disembarked. Mrs. General Ristenbatt shook hands with him cordially; the young officer stared at him coldly; Rosie kissed him enthusiastically; but Judelle, modest, shy Judelle, vouchsafed him only half a glance and scarcely answered to his bow of recognition, so fearful was she that her telltale face, would reveal the real state of her feelings toward him. Ross stood at the landing, looking on at the presence of the young officer, and interpreted her changing color as evidence of a tender feeling toward her escort. He walked off accordingly in a dudgeon, mentally execrating his folly in having fallen in love with a nice girl, and resolved to instantly tear her image from his heart, etc.

But it was no easy task he had set himself to do. His love for the gentle girl who had unconsciously trod the path of poverty and whose slender shoulders had bravely borne the weight of many cares, was no light sentiment or boyish fancy, to be dispelled at his bidding. It was a strong and fervent passion, intense as his nature, and loyal as his soul. Far easier would it have been to quench the fires of life within his bosom by the mere force of his will, than by his own volition to smother the deeper fires of love's pure passion, enkindled in his breast, by the steadfast eyes of the fair young teacher, at the first moment of their meeting. He became the most unhappy of mortals. Although he had made many strides toward the goal on which his eyes were fixed, he was yet one step beneath the lady of his choice and could not declare his love, or hope to sue for her hand, until he reached her level through an officer's commission.

He was doomed moreover to a daily crucifixion of the flesh, by witnessing the lover-like attentions, bestowed upon Judelle by young Lieutenant Smith. The walks and rides in which they frequently indulged were gall and wormwood to Ross's soul, debarred as he was, by his inferiority of position, from participating in their pleasures. But above all else Judelle's apparent indifference and seeming avoidance, of him, which while it was but the natural expression of maidenly timidity, fearful of betraying a love as yet unasked for, was construed by him into dislike, and occasioned him untold anguish. Mrs. General Ristenbatt, was kind to him, but mingled with her kindness was a patronizing spirit, a lofty bending as it were, from her superior station, that jarred harshly upon his sensitive nature. With General Ristenbatt, his intercourse was confined to mere soldierly greetings, and concise official interviews; but Ross had an instinctive feeling, that the General regarded him with favor and would render him a fatherly service if ever there were need. Little Rosie loved him dearly, and came to see him almost daily. From her childish prattle he learned much of Judelle, and grieved to know that she was unhappy.

"Judy says she's not sick," said the disingenuous little chatterbox, in her improved vocabulary, but sometimes she cries, and sometimes she smiles, all to herself, sometimes she sighs sometimes she blushes and looks sorry. I think she's sick, but mamma says she's in love, and mamma's always right."

Ross checked the little tell tale quickly, feeling it doubly to listen to her artless revelations. But her childish words troubled him. "Yes, she is in love, I might have known it," he thought bitterly. My pretty, bright Judelle is in love, with that lazy Lieutenant Smith. Well, if he were only worthy of her, I would not murmur. But then he is an officer! Strange that I should ever have been so mad as to imagine that she should care for me, a poor soldier without money or position!" mused the poor fellow sadly, and just then, as if in mockery of his feeling, Judelle herself, accompanied by Lieutenant Smith, rode briskly by. The twins were in animated conversation but the smile faded from the girl's face, as she encountered Ross's earnest gaze, and a vivid blush suffused her fair cheeks as she quickly averted her eyes.

He sought relief in renewed attention to his duties. These were now quite arduous. An expedition to the Black Rock river, as escort to the engineers of the railroad, in their western exploration was then being fitted out at the Post, and the employees of the Quartermaster's Department were ordered, with business, Ross inwardly chafed at the idea of remaining behind in the tedious ease of his clerical office. It would have been more consonant to his soldierly feelings to share the dangers of the troops, and the excitement of the march. But he was too well taught to ask an indulgence he knew would be denied him, his service in the Quartermaster's office being well-nigh indispensable. He was greatly interested in the preparation of the troops for the march, and spent his every leisure moment in the camp of the escort, outside the fort.

The appliances of camp life possessed for him a strange and peculiar charm. The funny little tents, the camp-fire and the sentry's cry of "all's well," the stirring reveille and the rattling Sergeons call and above all the glorious old flag, that came down so grandly with the setting sun each night, all had for him a charm, that familiarity had never lessened. Each busy day of preparation, had intensified his desire for active participation. In the spring campaign, against the stealthy natives of the wild, who stood ready to oppose this advance guard of civilization, his pulse beat high at thought of the laurels he might win, if permitted to accompany the troops; and his impatient spirit rose in fierce rebellion at the fate that doomed him to a life of inactivity.

General Ristenbatt was to go in command of the combined forces of cavalry, infantry and artillery, and the engineers of the railroad were to indicate the route to be travelled. The Colonel of the Regiment, the distinguished Brevet Major, General Barnard, De Oister, returned from his leave of absence and by virtue of his rank assumed command of the Fort. His first official act was to turn General Ristenbatt out of his quarters, and set up his bachelor establishment in the large house, sacred to the use of the commanding officer. General Ristenbatt by his superior rank of Lieutenant Colonel took the quarters of the Major. The Major in turn encroached upon the Senior Captain, and so on through the whole gradation of junior captains and first and second lieutenants, until everybody had been ousted and reduced a notch in the scale and comfort of their dwellings.

His second official act was to command his Adjutant to issue an order suspending the post school. His motive for this was an ancient and uncompromising contempt for Mrs. General Ristenbatt and her plebeian relations. Mrs. Ristenbatt reciprocated heartily his dislike, and missed no opportunity of manifesting it. Notwithstanding this she entertained him handsomely at her dinner table, and accorded him scrupulously this deference to which from his official rank he was entitled; while he in turn was studiously polite, and punctiliously exact in paying her those little attentions, to which from her standing as ranking lady of the Regiment she was justly entitled. Diplomatic enemies, they might be termed; for while in private she abjured him as an "old tyrant" and "deceitful hypocrite," her sweetest smiles in public were lavished upon him as commanding officer; and he, in turn, while mentally execrating her as an "old termagant" and "artful hypocrite," offered her pompously the flattering homage of his daily calls. Judelle never noticed. She was too young, too schoolgirlish, and too modest for him to regard with other than indifference. Her school too, was a matter too small for his interference. As for Judelle, she stood greatly in awe of the portly gentleman who bore himself with such a martial air, and headed her Aunt to the head of the dinner table with such an impressive bow of ceremonious elegance.

General De Oister was handsome, tall, courtly in manner, and martial in bearing. But he had a weak point in his "make up," as who has not? He possessed a decided aversion to active service, and invariably indulged in a lapse of absence when a sort of a skirmish seemed imminent. The sharp eyes of Mrs. General Ristenbatt had long before detected this failing and, like a skillful general, she harried the shafts of her satire, directly against this spot in the enemy's breastworks. An unusually keen retort from her ready tongue, at the dinner table, when she projected expedition was the subject of discussion, rankled in his mind. He was not gifted as a retortee, and moreover, a gentleman could not reply to a lady. He must seek some other means of retort, and cast about him for an opportunity.

As he sat, lost in thought, beside his parlor window and bending all the energy of his polished mind to the discovery of a clue that would lead him to victory and revenge, he was attracted, almost against his will, by the glances of Judelle, tripping lightly along the path, on her return from school. A bright idea struck him. He would take away the young lady's companion and so remind Mrs. General Ristenbatt of her inferior position. It would teach her a lesson too subtle to forestall her from intruding her plebeian friends into army circles. Strange he had never thought of it before. It was an outrage, a positive insult to the ladies of the Regiment; that this young nameless teacher had been imported from her lowly sphere, to associate on equal terms with the wives and families of officers. He would not tolerate it for a moment. To his soldierly mind, to decide was to execute, and so the order for the suspension of the school was at once given. Of the consequences to Judelle he did not once think. Her feelings were immaterial to him; but he smiled softly to himself as he thought of the blow he was about to administer to the pride of his ancient enemy Mrs. General Ristenbatt.

Judelle was greatly surprised the next morning at being waited upon by General De Oister's orderly who handed her an official communication addressed to her from headquarters. In great surprise she opened it. It stated tersely:

In consequence of an insufficiency of Post Funds, the Commanding General is reluctantly compelled to order the immediate suspension of the Post school.

By order of Gen. De Oister, Col. Commanding.

John Barclay, Post Adjutant.

The light faded from the young girl's face as she perused the polite official letter, leaving it pale and wan as a broken kite. The cruel paper dropped from her trembling hand, and it seemed as if the floor were sliding from beneath her feet as keenly alive to the full force of this cruel blow, she sank trembling into a seat, and tried to nerve herself to look calmly at her fate.

The young man's eyes were full of tears. She saw again her happy childhood and joyous early youth. She felt once more the shock of her father's tragic death and her mother's warning intellect, and after that, how dreary is the retrospect. A memory of a blighted home, a weary waiting, and of heavy cares. Months of devotion, of weary waiting, and of anxious thought, weeks of sorrowful strivings, with poverty and temptation. Days of anguish and nights of weary wakefulness. And to balance all these what did she possess save her slender hands, her loyal soul and her willing mind? What untold suffering has she not known through her shrinking sensitive nature and her weak woman's heart? None save herself and the angels knew how great had been the burdens of the past, nor through what fiery trials she has struggled for the sake of the helpless ones at home, and in thought of her dependent family, whose comfort and sustenance depended upon her own unaided self, she gave way to a burst of tears, trying in vain to see beneath the chastening rod, some traces of a Father's love.

What should she do? Idleness to her meant starvation to her mother and little brothers. It was now too late to obtain a situation in the east, and to remain at Fort Oryza was impossible. She knew full well the meaning of Gen. De Oister's order, and understood that she must go at once. Were it not for the loss of her situation, she would leave her uncongenial surroundings without regret. Her home at General Ristenbatt's had not been always pleasant. Her aunt though kind was often severe. She knew too that the General's household was an expensive one, while his resources were limited to his pay, and this barely equals his expenses. Hence notwithstanding their uniform generosity she has frequently felt her presence an added burden to their domestic cares. But where now should she go? In all the wide world where should she seek a friendly hand to help her find employment? The future looked dark indeed, and the poor child utterly prostrated by the unexpected blow cowered down in her armchair, raising her aching brain in vain to catch one glimpse of hope.

Little Rosie came in and tried to comfort her. "But though she was in the state of mind when even the sympathy of a child is sweet, the wise precepts of her small counsellor availed naught.

But while Judelle was draining her bitter cup of disappointment Sergeant Inglesbight had become suddenly intoxicated with a brimming draught of joy. The mail had just arrived and had brought him a commission as Second Lieutenant in the Army of the United States. The efforts of his friends had been successful and he was at last a commissioned officer. "Twas a useless task to attempt to describe his feelings. He rushed hither and thither like a madman, rose up and sat down again a dozen times in a minute, read and reread the precious document, and floundered about like a suddenly beheaded chicken under the stimulus of conflicting emotions. The peak of his ambition was realized. A brilliant future of military fame and glory lay stretched before him. The laurels of distinction hung within his grasp, awaiting only the prowess of his good right arm to transfer their budding glories to his temples. At last he was free to woo Judelle. Now he can sue for permission to accompany General Ristenbatt on the expedition to the Blackrock river and share the conquest of the frontier, and as the last thought flashed through his excited mind, he caught up his service cap, and hastened to the general's house to ask the desired permission.

And so it came about that when Judelle looked up in answer to a hurried knock, she saw before her, the flushed and handsome face of Sergeant Inglesbight eagerly asking for General Ristenbatt.

The General and his wife had gone out riding the faltered with downcast eyes and Ross with a respectful glance of sympathy toward her tearful face, apologized for his abrupt entrance and would have withdrawn, but little Rosie ran to him exclaiming "Sergeant, do come and talk to Cousin Judy! She's just about cried her eyes out, and General De Oister took her school away, and I am sure she ought to be glad to get rid of the had nasty boys, who are so troublesome and make faces at her all the time."

Judelle's tears broke forth afresh at this childish statement of her woes, but she dried them suddenly and looked up, her blue eyes aflame with the warmth of pleased surprise, for the handsome young Sergeant had stepped quickly to her side, and catching her little hand in his, unmindful of her modest resistance, was pouring forth in burning, passionate words, the eloquent story of his love. She listened with rapt amazement, and as he told her of his many adventures, his hardships, his life's burdens and perplexities dropped from her shoulders. "A stronger arm would bear them for her now; and when he ceased, with a sob of grateful trust she sank like a tired child into the protecting arms that were henceforth to be her shield and hiding place. Her heart of hope was gained. She had anchored at last in the still waters of happiness, and from her new found shelter looked out in trusting confidence to the peaceful years to come.

Little Rosie rushed away to the kitchen to tell her confidential friend, the cook, that Sergeant Inglesbight was kissing Judelle in the parlor; at which astonishing information that excitable personage dropped her bowl of oyster soup and hurried off to tell her cronies in the next house, and so spoiled the dinner, Mrs. General Ristenbatt had that day ordered to be prepared in honor of General De Oister.

General and Mrs. Ristenbatt were surprised on returning from their ride to find Sergeant Inglesbight with Judelle in their parlor, and sternly looked their request for an explanation. Ross's self possession did not desert him, and after saluting the General, he delivered into his hands his commission. Ross did not then know but he learned afterward that General Ristenbatt had secretly added his recommendation to that of his Gayville friends and so hastened the success of their efforts. The General's face was aglow with sincere gratification as he shook hands warmly with the young man, and offered him a seat. Mrs. Ristenbatt embraced him kindly and invited him to dinner. Ross then preferred his request to accompany the troops to the Blackrock, and it was readily granted, the General assuring him that he would place him on his staff as aidecamp. Ross would then have withdrawn, but changed his mind, and at Judelle's pleading, he remained to see the young lady's hand in his, and leading her forward, announced that they had plighted their vows to each other, and asked for the General's approval. It was granted willingly; and Mrs. Ristenbatt, after congratulating them heartily, expressed her satisfaction that Judelle was to marry an officer of the army.

"But I did not know he was an officer when I promised to marry him," said Miss Judelle, archly.

"God bless you for saying that, my dear," cried Ross, kissing her, "I shall not forget it, I am sure."

"What's this?" said General Ristenbatt, picking up General De Oister's special order, from the carpet.

Mrs. Ristenbatt was extremely indignant on learning the nature of its contents.

"Never mind, Judelle, my dear," she said consolingly, "you will be an officer's wife, after all,—and I found out yesterday that the cross old maid who used to teach the post school at Fort Ricketty is General De Oister's own cousin. I shall remain here of it, gently, before all the company, when he comes to dine,—his old school."

"Now, Judelle, my dear," you ought to be glad that General De Oister took you for his own daughter, and that he has made you his own daughter."

"You are right, Rosie," said Judelle with a brimming eye. "Life's best angels in disguise are often the best things that ever happened to us. I had not been in trouble, the Sergeant wouldn't have had courage to make love to you, and if you hadn't been crying so you couldn't speak, you'd have made believe you didn't love him."

Desperate Encounter With a Kangaroo.

The Albany (Australia) Banner says: (Perhaps the most sensational sensational incident that has ever been recorded occurred a few days since near Mullengandra, on the main Sydney road. The quarry headed in the direction of Mullengandra, and for some miles the pace was very hot. Brush fences and fallen timber were, of course, no serious obstacles to the long tails, and well mounted on a wiry old stock horse, Bourke found little difficulty in maintaining a respectable position in the hunt after a smart spin, in the course of which the hunter, if he had held his ground, had yet failed to gain an inch on the kangaroos, the horse began to show signs of caving in, and it seemed probable that the denizens of the forest would have the best of it. At this juncture, however, the kangaroos separated, few continuing on in the same direction as that which they had been going previously, and the third—a tremendous old man, about 7 feet high—making a sharp turn to the right. For a second or two Bourke was undecided as to which he should follow, but the dog soon settled the matter by taking after the old man. That this course was the wisest soon became apparent, as before another half mile of ground was covered the boomer displayed unmistakable symptoms of distress, and in five minutes the old man was brought to bay in the water-hole. Here, however, the kangaroo was still, to a certain extent, master of the situation, as from his singular position it was no easy matter either for man or dog to give the coup de grace. Bourke determined to push matters to a conclusion, and jumped off his horse in order to seize a sapling which lay conveniently at hand. While Bourke was in the act of stooping to pick up the sapling, the kangaroo, with one bound, was upon him, and in another minute had regained his position in the centre of the water-hole, with the unfortunate Bourke in his arms. Here, had it not been for the help of the faithful dog, our story would have had a more melancholy termination. Even as it was, poor Bourke got a bad whipping, and he thoroughly soaked the grip of the boomer could only be compared to that of a grizzly bear. Whether he would ever have got clear from the grip of the kangaroo if he had been without dog, is highly problematical, but as it turned out, the four-footed companion proved a most useful ally, and turned the scale of victory.

Each proposal must be accompanied by a bond (in the sum of $2000, duly signed by two responsible persons, that if the hay is not accepted, a contract for the delivery of the hay with two good and sufficient sureties, will be executed within ten days after notification of the award of the contract.
The right is reserved to the Government to reject any and all bids, also to increase or reduce the quantities to be delivered at any or all the posts named, by the hay tender to this effect at any time prior to July 31, 1875.
Proposals should be endorsed, "Proposals for Hay" and addressed to the undersigned.
B. DUNN, Major and U. S. A.

NOTICE.
To all whom it may concern:
Numerous complaints having been made by the Indians of this agency that white men are hunting and trapping on their lands in violation of the law, I hereby direct attention to the acts of Congress referring to the matter, viz: Sec. VIII. And be it further enacted, that if any person other than an Indian shall within the limits of any tribe with whom the United States shall have existing treaties, hunt or trap on their lands in violation of the law, except for subsistence, in the Indian country, such person shall forfeit the sum of five hundred dollars, and forfeit all the traps, guns, and ammunition in his possession, and be liable to be used for that purpose, and penalties so taken." Section X. And be it further enacted, that the Superintendent of Indian Affairs and Indian Agents and Sub-Agents, shall have authority to remove, from the Indian country, all persons found therein contrary to law, and the President of the United States is authorized to direct the military force to be employed in such removals. Now, I hereby warn parties against trapping, hunting on the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, as the law against so doing shall in future be strictly enforced.
WILLIAM COURTNEY,
Acting U. S. Indian Agent.

The Bismarck Tribune.

BISMARCK AND VICINITY.

Bismarck, D. T., May 5, 1875.

Price Reduced.

The price for single copies of the Tribune will hereafter be five cents instead of ten. The price for local notices is also reduced from fifteen cents per line to ten cents. The publishers have determined, not only to make the Tribune better than ever before, but to place it within the reach of everybody so far as the price is concerned. Thankful to the business men of Bismarck for past favors they invite attention to the new rates of advertising, confident that those who want an increase in business will take advantage of them to make their facilities known—particularly if they have any specialties.

Sewing Machines.

You can get Sewing Machines just as cheap in Bismarck as you can in St. Paul. Sewing Machine Agency. 41tf

Catholic Benefit.

The committee who had in charge the arrangements for the Catholic Benefit Ball desire to return thanks to Mrs. Louis, Nellie McLaughlin, Mrs. Proctor, Mrs. Ware, Miss Crane and others who contributed so largely to making the ball a success and the surroundings pleasant; and also to Messrs. Stearns, Marshall, Galloway, and Arnold, musicians; to Mr. Beardon, who furnished the hall free, and to the public in general for their appreciative patronage. The net receipts of the ball were $118.60. By order of the Committee.

You can get any thing you want in the Sewing Machine line, and all old machines made new at the Sewing Machine Agency. Bismarck, D. T. 41tf

To Dr. B. F. Slaughter: Dear Sir—As many of the citizens of Bismarck are desirous of hearing your lecture, termed "LOVE AND BEAUTY," we, the undersigned, most respectfully submit that you deliver the said lecture for the benefit of the Burleigh County Pioneer Association, to be delivered at such time as you may choose. Hoping this request may meet with a favorable reply, we have the honor to be, Respectfully yours, R. D. Guggen, R. D. Jennings, J. A. Emmens, W. W. Bill, J. C. Holmbeck, J. E. Walker.

Gentlemen: It affords me much pleasure to accede to your invitation, and will appear next Thursday, the 6th inst., at 7 o'clock p. m. I am, Sir, Respectfully, B. F. SLAUGHTER.

Henry Sagnier has rented the old Headquarter's Hotel for a first class restaurant. He is just from Washington, D. C., where he kept a similar institution.

Fresh arrival of oils, paints, varnish, etc., toilet articles, drugs, etc., at Dunn & Co's.

P. B. Barnett left yesterday to take charge of the section at Crystal Springs.

Those food of soda water will find that refreshing beverage, with the choicest syrups at Dunn & Co's.

Re. A. Williams has recently erected a building for a law office about a block below the land office on front street.

A fine assortment of the choicest wines, liquors and best imported cigars at Dunn & Co's.

Joseph Beardon is fitting up his establishment for a large stock of groceries.

Messrs. McLean & McNider have received their spring stock of groceries, and are putting in an unusually full line of Dry Goods, Clothing, &c.

M. Slattery has moved into his fine new building on Third Street, and is putting in a new stock of goods.

Rev. Mr. Sloan will be absent until July, and in the meantime the pulpit will be supplied from abroad. He leaves Thursday.

The Capitol Hotel looks more cheerful than ever this spring, and is daily becoming more popular. Since trains have commenced running, its register shows long lists of arrivals, and has been crowded pretty nearly to its highest capacity.

The 7th cavalry, viz. Bonteen's, Moreland's and McDougal's companies, are on their way to Bismarck from Louisiana, and may be expected here next week. Two companies of the 7th stationed lately at Fort Totten arrived yesterday. The other three companies from the South may be expected here at an early day, when the 7th cavalry intact will be ready for an advance on the hostile Sioux, the "hoss feed thieves," or the Black Hills.

An Elegant Establishment.

Messrs. Wilson & Porter continue improving the appearance of their drug store, having recently added another coat of paint, put in circular counters, and otherwise improved the interior appearance, until there is no drug store in the west more elegant or convenient. They carry a full line of stationery, notions etc., not to speak of a fine and full assortment of drugs, and are now putting in a full line of paints, oils, etc. Col. Wilson, the senior member of the firm, is well known as a public spirited citizen and high toned gentleman, and Dr. Porter, the junior member, as an excellent gentleman and successful physician.

Black Alpacas from 60 to 85 cents per yard at Watson & Bro's.

Alex. Starefsky has sold his harness making business at Bismarck, and gone to St. Louis.

Drowned.

A number of persons were trying to cross the river in a skiff near the Point last Friday when the boat capsized and one of the occupants, Jack Sweeney, was drowned. His body was not found.

Ladies' fine Kid Button Shoes at Watson & Bro's.

The Pioneer Drug Store.

One of the first institutions in Bismarck was the Pioneer Drug Store, managed and owned by Dr. J. P. Dunn and John A. McArthur. It became a permanent fixture here in the summer of 1872, long before the Northern Pacific reached this point, and within a few weeks after the hostile Indian had given place to the advance guard of civilization, represented by the Northern Pacific surveying parties. They pitched their tent and commencing business in a small way, have increased their facilities with increasing demands, until now they occupy a building, and carry a stock that would do credit to any western village. Their stock of drugs is complete in every particular; they carry a fine assortment of the finest liquors and best imported cigars, a full line of notions, stationery, &c., together with paints, oils, varnishes, etc. They have also put in an attractive soda fountain, the first and only one in the village, and are prepared to deal out cooling draughts to the thirsty multitude. Look in on Dunn & Co. at the Pioneer Drug Store, examine their goods and prices, and see if they cannot interest you.

Six Diamond R trains left Helena for Carroll about the 20th of April.

Gent's French Calf, Custom made sewed boots, for $10 at Watson & Bro's.

Judge Ford of Fort Lincoln visited his Bismarck friends Saturday.

A new and beautiful design of Turkey Red Table Cloths at Watson & Bro's.

The monthly cattle fairs at Perham, present a fine opportunity for our dealers to buy stock.

J. W. Raymond & Co. have received several car loads of supplies, including three of flour, two of potatoes, &c.

Fred Strauss has received a full stock of watches, clocks, jewelry &c., and is a practical jeweler and watch maker, having an established reputation for the excellence of his work, and the reliability of his goods.

Sleeping cars have again been placed on the Minnesota Division of the N. P. and the trip to St. Paul can now be made in two days and one night.

Two car loads of telegraph wire was shipped to Manitoba last week. One thousand men have been advertised for, for work on the Canada Pacific.

Joseph Laundre has purchased the harness shop, stock, &c., of Alex. Starefsky, and he and associate will hereafter run the harness business at Starefsky's old stand.

Improvements.

Building and repairing seems to be the order of the day. Not less than twenty buildings are now in course of erection. The village is rapidly extending towards the river; buildings already extending below 1st street nearly two blocks.

N. P. Clark and A. H. Wilder have secured the contract for the erection of the agency buildings at Berthold to replace those destroyed by fire last winter.

The compositor who went into the Knife River coal bank 300 miles will be back in time to join the Black Hills expedition. The item should have read feet instead of miles.

General Charles Candy, clerk for Major T. J. Eckerson, Depot and Shipping Quartermaster at this place, arrived on last Monday's train.

General Candy was Colonel of the 66th Ohio Infantry during the war, and was brevetted a Brigadier General. His family remains for the present in St. Paul.

Major R. C. Seip, the genial Post Trader at Fort Lincoln, made a pleasant visit to the Tribune office Monday; our latch string is always out to the Major and his friends.

Thomas R. Reynolds, sent to Fort Madison, from Bismarck last summer, for a term of two years, has been pardoned by Gov. Peabody. Pardon granted for good conduct and rapidly failing health.

The channel of the Missouri is now about fifty yards back of where the Point was, and the Point is no more, all of the buildings having been swept away. "Apache Bill," John Fay and Mike Francis are rebuilding near the ferry.

The amount of rainfall, or melted snow, at Bismarck, as shown by the reports of the U. S. Signal Sergeant at this Station, from September 23d, 1874 to April 27th, 1875 was 7.13 inches. Now, if old probabilities and kind Providence will give us an equal amount of moisture for the next seven months, we shall trot out a crop of vegetables that will make the natives laugh with delight.
